

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A mobile information gateway comprises a mobile communications device, preferably a phone, which includes a first communications link with a remote data source, typically the Internet, and a second communications link to a separated display, so that data output is conveniently presented for ready use.